LSJS degrees revalidated by Middlesex University with glowing commendations.

The London School of Jewish Studies (LSJS) have been successfully re-validated by Middlesex University for six years from September 2021 for their BA & MA in Jewish Education. As well as confirming that Middlesex University will continue to validate LSJS degrees the university also gave the organisation four commendations:

- The programme teams' support and ethics of care towards the students
- Intellectually rich curriculum content
- Creative use of online Pedagogy
- The approach of growing the programmes in a broad range of ways through global partnerships and access to student finance.

Dr Helena Miller, LSJS Director of Degrees, Co-Head of Teacher Training, and Senior Research Fellow, says "we are delighted by this outcome. This not only means that we can continue to provide both BA and MA degrees in Jewish Education, it means that we can also develop and grow our programmes."

Middlesex University congratulated LSJS on such a successful re-validation. Joanne Greenaway, LSJS Chief Executive says "Dr Helena Miller leads a fantastic team of real experts in the field of Jewish education. I am so pleased that this has been recognised so emphatically by our university partner and am proud to be able to run such excellent, innovative programmes which are attracting teachers and educators from all around the world."

LSJS is the only provider outside of the USA and Israel to offer these degrees, which are run by a dedicated staff offering expert knowledge. You can now study for a BA (Hons) Jewish Education remotely by joining classes via Zoom if you are unable to attend sessions at the LSJS campus in NW London.

The MA Jewish Education has always been run as a distant learning course attracting students from around the world. This year LSJS is delighted to announce that they will be including a dedicated module on informal education making the MA a great opportunity for Jewish informal educators to develop their knowledge and career.

Applications are currently still be accepted for the BA Jewish Education due to start in September. For more information on LSJS degrees or courses please visit www.lsjs.ac.uk or call 0208 203 6427
