

LSJS National Jewish Education Conference for Secondary School Teachers 2021

50 Secondary School Jewish Studies teachers came together for the National Jewish Education Conference for Secondary School Teachers, organised by LSJS last Wednesday. For the second year running the conference had to take place via Zoom but this did not stop lively debates and fascinating presentations exploring topics such as “Spirituality in our Schools”, “Teaching Torah to Teenagers” or “Breaking Out of the Jewish Bubble”.

Chief Rabbi Mirvis gave an inspirational keynote address before the teachers were able to select their first session. With 11 speakers spread out across three slots throughout the morning it was a busy schedule, but with recordings available for any sessions teachers could not join live ensuring no one missed out.

Dr Helena Miller, Co-Head of Teacher Training and Director of Degrees, said “after such a challenging year, it was great to be able to give our Jewish Studies teachers opportunities to learn with and from their colleagues. Teachers went back to their classrooms refreshed and energised”.

Bradley Conway, who teaches at Immanuel College said “Thank you so much! It was a great morning. The talks have been really interesting and beneficial.”

The LSJS National Jewish Education Conference for Secondary School Teachers 2021 was set up following on from the success of the conference for Primary school teachers which runs every January and is now in its’ tenth year.

For more information on LSJS teacher conferences or to find out about our range of please training and professional development courses please visit www.lsj.ac.uk or call 0208 203 6427